THE DAVIDSON NEWS

(Editor's Note: By this time, you have already received a welcome to summer school by the college officials, your instructor, and your many friends. Since this is the first edition of our summer newspaper, we extend the following word of friendship--perhaps belated, but nevertheless equally sincere.)

As the Davidson summer session rolls into action for another tumultuous week, we would like to extend a word of welcome to all concerned -- are freshmen through "graduate students."

We hope that this little bit of journalism will serve in a small way to help you keep up with campus news and activities while you study, and perhaps to add a laugh occasionally on the side. Any suggestions, news, or contributions in general will be met with sincere appreciation and signs of relief.

A special word of greeting is in order to the large group of charming members of the legendary opposite sex who will grace our campus for a while. This is almost enough to bring a Davidsonite back to school without the usual grinders about assignments, the weather, infirmary anti-histamine prices, and Union coffee -- or any other coffee that comes along. Welcome, Ladies, to the renowned ranks of the Davidson gentleman!!

ADVICE

by Ed Manders

Dear Mr. Manders:

I am one of a few co-eds at a college summer school where the odds are 12 to 1. When I decided to go there, I thought it would be loads of fun and that I would have lots of dates, but as yet I have not had a date. Can you help me?

LONESOME

Dear Lonesome: Odds 12 to 1? No date? Go home!

Having been here since June 12, I have found that my decision to come was a good one. The classes are small, the hours are not bad, the faculty is friendly, and the student body is small and congenial.

There are eleven students in my math 11 class -- ten of whom are not actually in college. With such a small group, relations between students and professor are more informal than in larger classes. This informality creates a greater desire to study.

My class meets at eight o'clock with a 15-minute break between first and second periods. And the instructor's homework may be done during the 15-minute break period, which allows for some amount of leisure time in the afternoon. The work is not too heavy and leaves a little time for the student.

The faculty is friendly and is well qualified.

Even though I have not met many of the boys in my math class group, they seem to be congenial with each other. Their number is small enough to get to know most of them during the first session week.

I have no gripes -- only praises -- about Davidson. It is surely a grand privilege to be at school here.
