Trustees Abolish Segregation Policy; Martin Reveals $835,000 Bequest

BY ERNEST GODAN

In 1936, Davidson College received a letter from one of its oldest alumni, stating that President Martin had made a bequest of $835,000 to the college. This generous gift was to be used for academic purposes and to further the college's mission.

Scholar Harrison Wellford, leading fellowships for the graduating class, noted that this gift was the largest ever received by the college, and it would have a profound impact on the institution's future.

Congoese Students May Enter in Sept.

By Tom Loflin

The Trustees of Davidson College yesterday approved a policy that will allow students of Congolese origin to enter the college regardless of race or nationality.

The policy was introduced to address concerns raised by students who argued that the college's current policies discriminated against Congolese students due to their race.

Fruit Displays Paintings As Hamilton Show Opens

By Bill Mall

To make a painting start with the town of the city in the left corner starting today, is quite verbal in its exploration of her birthplace and approach to it. The paintings are a mixture of oil and watercolor and are intended to create a sense of place.

These paintings were developed with the collaboration of a range of artists who have worked on the project. The artist's relationship to the town and its people is central to her work, and she aims to create a sense of place that is both familiar and new.

The paintings are on display at the college's art gallery, where they will remain until the end of next month.

Many of the things Mrs. Hamilton makes are similar to similar works of art. She has studied and explored the work of many artists, and her paintings are informed by her understanding of their techniques and approaches.

In a house and trees can give the sensation of being in the sky, the subjects are not always obvious, and the viewer is left to decide what they are seeing. The paintings are a blend of memory and imagination, and they aim to evoke a sense of place and identity.
To Educate All Youth . . .

Neither the Charter of Davidson College nor the By-Laws of the Trustees have ever stipulated that race, nationality, creed or class should be a condition or limitation on the student body of the institution. The Trustees of Davidson College expressed the earnest desire "to educate youth without discrimination, whether light or heavy, and thereby promote the more general diffusion of knowledge and virtue." The present policy of Davidson College is in doing so wishing the Faculty to consider carefully all applications received from foreign countries. The purpose is to provide the same opportunities for all students, without regard to national origin.

For the sake of a long-endured, intense battle on the part of THE DAVIDSONIAN, the Trustees' desire is to educate all students equally and without discrimination.

Stated in one of its greatest limitations, if David T. McRae, Jr., was known before he was Southern. As a result of the political and economic developments in the Southern United States, the number of students who have attended Davidson College has increased significantly in recent years.

Davidson students even lack alike the opportunities for enrolling courses of study at Davidson. A genuine question about the church-related college. For reasons at Davidson that many students have found the church-related college to be a very fruitful experience in their lives. The college's president, however, is under a lot of pressure to continue enrolling students in the college, which has remained relatively stable in size.

Because I have two articles and informed Roman Catholic laymen at professors in my past experience, I have been asked and chose to present them to the college community. The professors are more open to presenting the church-related college, and their students receive a very sound education in a religious setting.

Now, however, we are in the middle of the millennium, and the church-related college is facing new challenges. The college's president is under pressure to continue enrolling students in the college, which has remained relatively stable in size.
